We can get confidence intervals for the parameters and the exponentiated parameters using bootstrapping. For the negative binomial model, these would be incident risk ratios, for the zero inflation model, odds ratios. We use the boot package. First, we get the coefficients from our original model to use as start values for the model to speed up the time it takes to estimate.